Getting back to work

The workplace has undergone great change in the past couple of months, with fewer staff, one-way systems and more anti-bacterial hand gel than ever. As lockdown is easing and more businesses are reopening, the safety of staff and customers remains a top priority for businesses. Imposed social distancing measures and an increase in the remote workforce isn't going anywhere, instead it is shaping the look and feel of the new workplace.

70% of workers from Britain's biggest businesses are due to remain at home for the foreseeable future, while 30% of their colleagues return to the office*; the feeling of inclusion has never been more important.

Thousands of small medium enterprises in England are set to benefit from £20 million of new government funding** to help them recover from the effects of the COVID-19 pandemic.

Small and medium-sized businesses will have access to grants of between £1,000 - £5,000 to help them access new technology and equipment as well as other services to help them get back on track.

We have put together a series of meeting space products designed to bring your staff back to work remotely, whilst enabling communication with those who return to the office. Social distancing and safety is paramount, so we have also included some signage packages specifically geared towards COVID-secure environments.

In the past, meeting rooms were generally comprised of many people physically in the space with one or two joining remotely. With the current situation and new safety guidelines being enforced, that's likely to change with only a few people able to be in the meeting room and the majority joining remotely.

While most workers can host a virtual meeting from their home office, transferring these skills into a meeting room may not be as easy. Many meeting rooms still lack the technology and software for virtual collaboration.

SMART Teamwork software enables you to launch web-based conferencing with a single touch.
